Tonight, the President is asking Americans to pay billions of dollars more for dozens of new government programs. Republicans in Congress will carefully look at each and every proposal he makes. But one thing needs to be clear to the President: we will not raise taxes and we will not go back to the days when government raided Social Security and spent the money on government programs.

The Republican Congress stopped the raid on Social Security last year. And we won't let the President take us back to the days of spending the Social Security Trust Fund. There is no going back.